Workshop for Executives on Process

If you are starting to get these questions from your executives, you are making progress:

- John in purchasing was raving about some kind of improvement project you helped him with. Tell me more.
- How did our response time go down so much last month?
- Jane in HR has been talking about process measures. What is that all about?
- In our last Executive Committee meeting, the VP of Supply Chain was talking about how a process focus had allowed them to improve the performance of the supply chain. How can we apply that approach to our area?

If your Executives are starting to discuss process concepts and thinking about how to deploy some of these process approaches, it is time to get them up to speed on the concepts involved and get them excited about what process can do for your organization.

We facilitate a one day workshop with your Executives to give them hands on exposure to what a process approach is all about. The workshop includes:

- What is a process approach (which we call Process Based Management)
- Keys to becoming process-centered
- Approaches to classifying processes and why that matters
- Integration of initiatives around process to provide focus
- Why should we become process based
- What a process based company looks like
- Where do we start

We use exercises and break out groups to get the Executives involved in the applying the concepts. They will apply some of the approaches to gain insight into process issues in your organization.

Target Group: Executives who can influence and impact the success of process approaches in the organization

Workshop Size: Ideal size is 9-12 people

Location: On-site

Time Commitment: 9am-3 pm
